The Soma Code, Parts I-III

I. Luminous Visions in the Rig Veda

II. Soma's Birth, Purification, and Transmutation into Indra

III. Visions, Myths, and Drugs

EDITOR'S NOTE

The evidence for actual visions of Vedic poets and priests has been downplayed in recent writings. This in spite of hymns such as the famous tava suukta (RV 10.119) and that of the long-haired muni of RV 10.136, who has drunk 'poison' and clearly represents a shaman-like figure on a quest, flying through the sky with the wind and the gods. One must also take into account the singular hymn that speaks not of vision but of aural experiences, RV 6.9.6 "apart fly my ears, apart my eyes, apart the light that has been put into the heart; my mind moves away into the distance..."

North Asian and, indeed Laurasian, shamanism (see M. Witzel in: Mother Tongue VI, see: <http://www.people.fas.harvard.edu/~witzel/MT-VI.jpg>) is also visible in rituals such as the Vijapeya, where one has to climb up a pole to reach 'heaven,' and to stay there for a while. This is what Kham shamans in the Nepalese Himalayas still do today.

These and other Central and North Asian connections (see now J.F. Staal, How a psychoactive substance becomes a ritual: the case of Soma. Social Research 68, 2001, 745-778) urge us to take a closer look at shamanistic behavior and the kind of vision quests that
